Day and Night Fighting Raging in the Vicinity of Lille and Arras—Belgian Trenches Under Artillery Fire Since Saturday Morning—French and British Troops Capture 5000 Prisoners in the Northern District—German Forces on the Meuse Endangered by the Capture of Their Line of Communication Between Metz and St. Mihiel.

Kaiser Wilhelm's troops have forced the passage of the river Yser between Nieuport and Dixmunde, Belgium.

A violent battle is being fought between Nieuport and the river Yser. German attacks west and south of Lille have been repulsed.

France announced that French artillery has gained command over one of the main lines of German communication, leading from Metz to the German troops near St. Mihiel. This success endangers the forces endeavoring to drive a wedge across the Meuse river between Verdun and Toul.

French field artillery, according to the official report, has destroyed three new German batteries, one of large calibre on the Meuse.

(By International News Service)

Paris, Oct. 26.—Following up the advantage gained by breaking through the Belgian line along the Yser river and forcing the passage of that stream between Dixmunde and Nieuport, the Germans are concentrating their forces in a series of serious attacks at that point.

The Belgian trenches are under an incessant fire, which has lasted since Saturday morning.

Allies Capture 5000 Prisoners
Day and night fighting has been raging in the vicinity of Lille and Arras.

Farther north the French and British allies captured approximately 5000 prisoners in the last six days.

A heavy artillery duel has begun along the right wing of the allies.

Allies Maintain Front
It was officially stated today: "During the day yesterday our front has been maintained. Germans that had succeeded in crossing the river Yser, between Nieuport and Dixmunde have not been able to make any further progress."

In the battles of later days the only changes to have suffered considerable losses."

ALLEGED CATTLE THIEF GOES TO PENITENTIARY

Several judicial matters were taken up in court this morning. Fred Carson, the defendant in the commonwealth vs. Carson case, was fined $1 and the cost of prosecution and sentenced to a minimum term of one year and a maximum term of two years in the Western Penitentiary. Carson was one of the alleged cattle thieves and was out on parole. He broke the parole and was brought here to the jail from DuBois on Friday evening.

Testimony was heard in a desultory case, and Harry Shaffer, the defendant, promised to live with his wife again if she would come back to their home. The matter was left open to see if they could not settle it between themselves.

In the case commonwealth vs. Howard Isenberg and Andrew Matts, petty robbery and larceny, the boys were given into the custody of their parents, the costs to be paid by the county.

Habeas corpus proceedings were brought for the release of Claud M. Watson from jail and $500 bail was given for his appearance at December court.

AUTOMOBILE PARTY MEETS WITH MISHAPS ON SUNDAY

CLYMER ELEVEN BADLY BEATEN BY HIGH SCHOOL

Although the football team from Clymer, which played the Clearfield High school at the Driving park on Saturday, was composed of much older and heavier men, yet the scholastic eleven experienced very little difficulty in piling up a score of 37 to 0 before the referee's whistle finally brought the contest to a close.

With the advantage in weight against them the high school boys opened the game with open plays and forward passes in which speed and dexterity counted most, and with this system of attack scored two touchdowns on the visitors before the first period was over.

Clymer was in possession of the ball but once in the opening period and then failed to make first down, their attempts to break through the Clearfield line being repulsed with heavy losses by the excellent work of the red and black guards and tackles.

In the second half Clearfield resorted to a defensive game and the lineemen showed that they have greatly improved in form since the game with Bellefonte, when weakness in this department was apparent.

Cochrane, H. Flegal, Lima, Fulford and W. Flegal played excellent games for the high school while the entire team, from end to end, did better in the opinion of the coaches and close followers of the eleven, than ever before this season.

Judging from the game of Saturday the prospects are indeed bright for victories over DuBois and the other opponents of the season.

How Badger Sank the Submarine

(By International News Service)
Sherness, England, Oct. 26.—The English destroyer "Badger," which rammed and sank a German submarine off Holland Saturday has arrived here for repairs. The officers made this statement: "It was nearly dusk when the look-out discovered a strange craft ahead. We raced and crashed through her shell, sinking her. Our bows were damaged, but not seriously."

The "Badger" was damaged by a collision with a German submarine off the coast of Holland. The submarine was sunk, and the "Badger" is now in port for repairs.

The community at Kylertown was greatly shocked Saturday night when it was learned that Osler Hughes, a well known farmer of near the town had committed suicide.

Mr. Hughes lived on a farm about one-half mile from Kylertown. He was a thrifty farmer with no apparent troubles to worry him, therefore the announcement that he had killed himself was startling news to the people of the community.

According to the information gleaned relative to the suicide, Mr. Hughes shot himself in the head about 6 o'clock Saturday evening, the bullet entering the right side of his head above the temple and passing through his head emerged near the left temple. He remained in an unconscious condition until 4 o'clock Sunday morning, when he died.

From what can be learned Hughes was jealous of a hired man, Ralph Lewis, who had been working on the Hughes farm since last summer. He and Lewis had some words Saturday morning while in the barn. Hughes is also said to have upbraided his wife.

When Lewis entered the house Hughes told him to pack his clothes and leave the farm, which the young man did.

Shortly after 5 o'clock in the evening Hughes went into the house and began taking off his shoes. His wife told him the pigs had not been fed, and he replied, "I am going to kill myself." He started to get a gun hanging in the kitchen and his wife ran screaming to a neighboring farm for help. A brother-in-law returned to the house, but saw nothing of Hughes until an upstairs room was entered. Hughes was found on a bed with a revolver in his hand, himself in a dying condition from the wound in his head.

District Attorney Welch and Coroner Pollum held an investigation, but it was found to be a clear case of suicide.

Mr. Hughes was about 50 years of age and was highly respected by his neighbors. He was of a jovial disposition, always looking upon the bright side of life, hence his rash act is the more unaccountable, there being no known cause for his seeking to end his life.

Deceased is survived by his widow, one brother, William, and two sisters, Mrs. James Wertz and Mrs. James F. Thompson, all residing on adjoining farms near Kylertown. He was the son of James Hughes, one of the early settlers of Cooper township. At the time of his death he was supervisor of the township.

The funeral will be held tomorrow at 2 P. M., services being held at the Methodist church, Kylertown, and interment in the cemetery of that church.

Probably not all of the "cheers for Penrose" issue from the cup that cheers and inebriates.

Despite the fighting in Belgium, Brand Whitlock continues to get some of his bright sayings through the office of the censor.

Londoners are "looking up" these days and nights, but not in accordance with the religious admonition. They are on the watch for that visit from Zeppelins.

It is claimed that a large number of Democrats will vote for Penrose. Sure; there are many Penrose Democrats in the state, and they will vote for Penrose or Palmer.

However, the United States should be careful not to get into a dispute with any foreign power through this country's defense of the Standard Oil company's attempt to ship oil to Germany.

Shall the great state of Pennsylvania be represented in the United States senate by the candidate of the Standard Oil company the liquor interests or by the candidate of the people?

While admitting that Dr. Brumbaugh's private life is unimpeachable, it cannot be denied that he is indorsed in his gubernatorial election by men who are not leaders in highly moral movements.

Vote for Pinchot and protection to the children who are forced to labor in mills and factories at a mere pittance because Penrose defeated the child labor bill in the Pennsylvania legislature.

Congress has adjourned, and the members hope that the people are so busy discussing the war they will not demand of the congressman an explanation of the long session at which no beneficial legislation was passed.

Vote for Lex N. Mitchell for congress at large and help defeat John R. K. Scott, the subservient tool of the Penrose gangsters who defeated the bills in the legislature which were intended to advance the interests of the people.

The kaiser pretends to despise the serfs of Russia. What are the people of an empire who have no say in the making of war in which the subjects of the empire must do the fighting and be killed at the pleasure of their ruler?

There is nothing in the past record of Hon. Alonso S. Moulthrop with which constituents can find fault, but there is much which they can commend. As state senator Mr. Moulthrop will continue to serve the people and fight the Penrose gangsters.

When you read that two hundred thousand men were killed, wounded or taken prisoners in one battle in Europe you can get some idea of what stupendous casualties result in modern fighting by realizing that these figures stand for the population of a large American city.

CANNOT SUPPORT PENROSE

Hon. Thomas H. Murray's indorsement of Gifford Pinchot ought to be worth a good many votes for Pinchot in this state. Everybody knows that Mr. Murray is a loyal Republican, and when he declares that he cannot support Penrose there is a good reason for the declaration. Mr. Murray and a large number of other Republicans know that Penrose, besides being unfit to represent this state in the United States senate, has done more to disrupt the Republican party than any other man in the state.

Mr. Murray is a foe to liquor, and he knows that the liquor element is seeking to have Penrose elected. The Clearfield lawyer and author is a close student of men, and his reading of the character of Penrose does not place the senator in a favorable light in Mr. Murray's eyes. Mr. Murray believes that Gifford Pinchot is a clean, conscientious man, a man who has no alliance with grafters or rum, hence Mr. Murray will vote for Mr. Pinchot. Those Republicans who will follow Mr. Murray's example will have no cause for regretting their action.

BERLIN AND PETROGRAD

Readers of newspapers must be somewhat bothered to discover what is truth and what is fiction in the news sent out from Berlin and Petrograd regarding the war in Galicia. The German and Russian war officers should get together and endeavor to make their announcements more truthful and less conflicting. Berlin reports that the Russians have been driven out of Galicia and have fled to Russian territory. The statements from Petrograd are the exact reverse of the Berlin stories, the Germans being the ones to be whipped out of their boots.

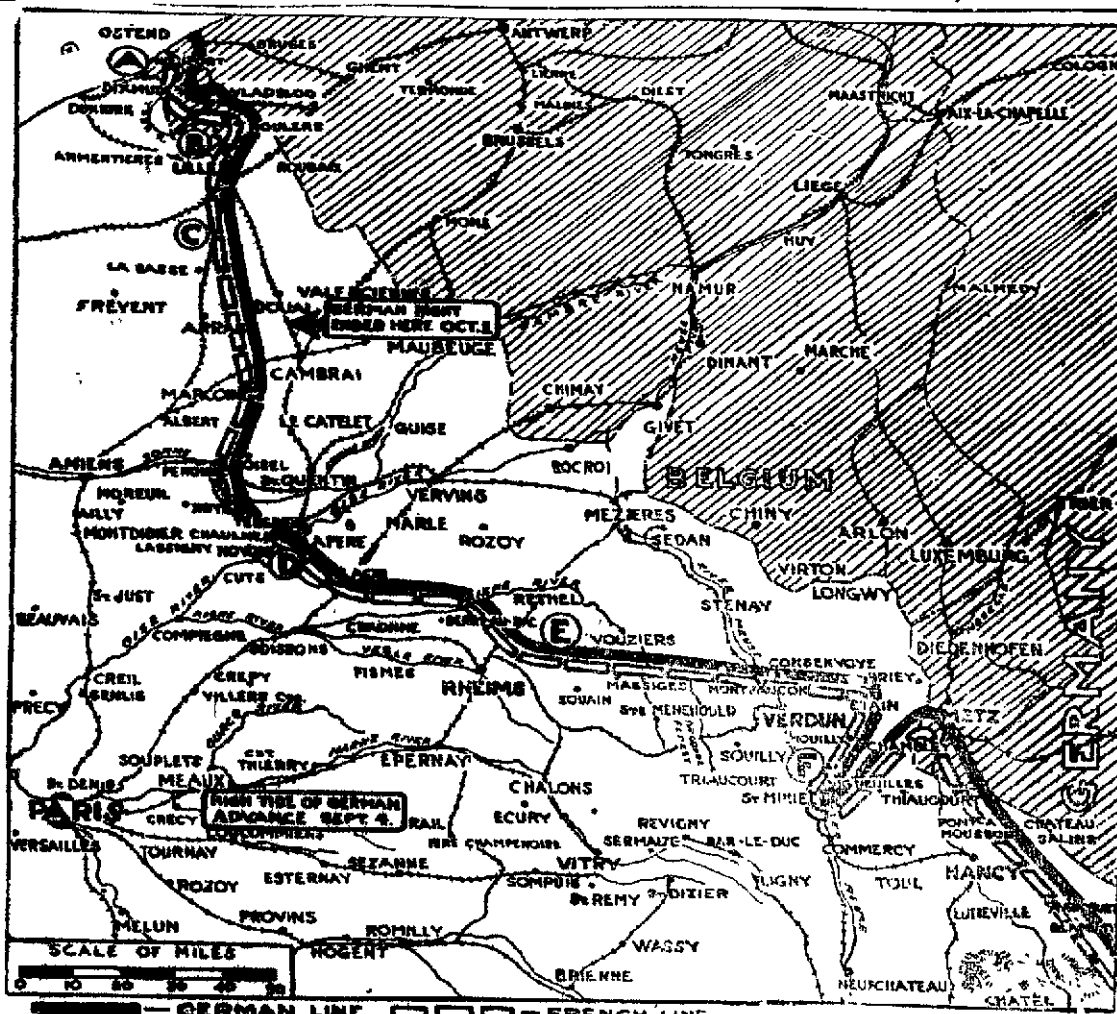

What is the American citizen to make from these conflicting reports other than that both Berlin and Petrograd are not adhering strictly to the truth in making their announcements? It is but natural that Berlin and Petrograd should issue rosy statements for home consumption, for it is necessary in both countries to cause the people to imagine that victory perches upon the banners of the home government. But what is the use of trying to fool the people of the rest of the world with fake war news? That hard fighting has been in progress around Przemyśl and Warsaw there is no doubting but neither side appears to have gained any advantage up to this time.

IT'S UP TO KALBFUS

More than one-quarter of a million dollars will flow into the state treasury from fees collected from hunters in this state this year. Clearfield county hunters will contribute about six thousand dollars of this amount. It was supposed that the money gathered from hunters would be used by the state game commission to restock the woods and fields with game birds and animals. This has not been done in past years and it will not be done next year. No game of any kind, with the exception of a few elk, has been placed in Clearfield county for a number of years.

In the meantime, the hunters from the big cities—pot hunters, almost everyone of them, have been engaged in slaughtering game birds in several of the counties, into which they have been invited to hunt through the efforts of Secretary Kalbfus. A Williamsport newspaper states that one party of game hogs from Northumberland county returned home with four hundred pheasants and thirty squirrels. Is it any wonder that local hunters fail to find it impossible to shoot game of any kind? Is it any wonder that the legitimate hunter denounces the state game commission for allowing a few favored game hogs from the big cities to slay all the game in sight just to make a big showing when they return home?

Isn't it about time that there should be a shaking up of the state game commission? Every sportsman in the state should enter protest against present conditions relative to game. There is no game in the woods and fields because the state game commission does not spend the money at its disposal to restock woods and fields and because pets of the secretary of the commission and his wardens are permitted to kill everything in sight without protest or any effort to stop the useless and wicked slaughter. With a large amount of money at its disposal the state game commission should be able to replace the

The Planting of a Tree.

Wouldst thou upbuild a home where sweet wild lives are nested,
Glad with the sound of song, quick with the flash of wings,
Where the soft broods may rock, warmhoused and unmolested,
Deep in the leafy nooks, through all the changeable springs?

Or wouldst thou rear an arch of no-blessed grace and splendor,
Lifted in air and light, shaped by the sun and storm,
Moved by the wandering wind, swayed by each influence tender,
Yet by the hand of life molded to steadfast form?

Wouldst thou make day more fair, and night more rich and holy,
Winter more keenly bright, and summer's self more dear,
Grant the sweet earth a gift, deep rooted, ripening slowly,
Add to the sum of joys that bless the rounded year?

Go, then, and plant a tree, lovely in sun and shadow,
Gracious in every kind—maple and oak and pine.
Peace of the forest glade, wealth of the fruitful meadow,
Blessings of dew and shade, hereafter shall be thine!

For though thou never see the joy thy hand hath granted,
Those who shall follow three thy generous boon may share.
Thou shalt be Nature's child, who her best fruit hath planted,
And each of many a spring shall find thy gift more fair.

CHAPTER XXXVII.

Fireplay.

Contented with the promise of a thousand dollar advance on his contract, providing he returned with horses within a stipulated time, Mr. Hopi Jim Slade drifted quietly away into the desert night.

Well content, persuaded that the morrow's sun would never set upon a world tenanted by one Alan Law, that monomaniac, Seneca Trine, forgot his recent ill temper and set himself diplomatically to adjust the differences between his daughter, Judith, and his first lieutenant, Marrophat.

It was no facile task. Marrophat could not be trusted to work with a single mind because of his infatuation for Judith. Judith could no more be trusted faithfully to serve her vow to bring Alan Law to her father's feet alive or dead, because—O cruel irony of Fate!—she herself had fallen in love with that same man whose death she had pledged herself to compass.

Only when, as now, half mad with jealousy, determined to see Alan dead rather than yield him to the woman he loved, her sister, might Judith be counted upon to serve her father in his lust for vengeance as he would be served—and even so not without Marrophat at her elbow to egg her on through her resentment of his surveillance. Neither could be trusted, in deed, to work alone to the desired consummation, for Trine had secret reason to fear that Marrophat might, given opportunity, connive at Alan's escape in order that he might marry Rose and so throw Judith back into his arms, Marrophat's arms.

Poor, deluded fool!

Such was the private comment of Marrophat's master.

For all that, it was the man and not his daughter, whom Trine designated to lead the expedition, cunningly counting on Judith's chagrin to work upon her passions and excite her to one last, mad, blind attempt that should prove successful.

Smiling his secret smile, Trine announced his decision at the last moment, while Hopi Jim waited with his horses and an assistant—one Texas—for whose utter innocence of scruples Mr. Slade unhesitatingly vouched.

Suddenly submissive, at least in outward seeming, Judith bowed to this decision, marched out of the car, and suffered Marrophat to help her mount her horse.

Now, deliberately, as the little cavalcade rode through the moonlit desert night, the girl maneuvered her horse to the side of Hopi Jim, and then dropped back, permitting Marrophat to lead the way with Texas.

As deliberately she set herself to work upon the bandit's susceptibility to her charms.

Within an hour she had him ready to do anything to win her smile.

In that first rush of golden day a khaki and the girl came quietly into the town of Mesa riding slowly in order that the noise of their approach might not warn the fugitives, who Hopi asserted confidently would still be sound asleep in the accommodations offered by the town's one hotel.

It was to be a town only in courtesy, this Mesa, a straggling street of shacks ramshackle relics of what had once been a promising community the half-way station between the railroad and the mining camps secreted in the fastnesses of the Painted Hills—camps now abandoned, their very names almost faded out of the memory of mankind.

Midway in this string of edifices the hotel stood—a rough, unpainted, wooden edifice, mainly veranda and bar-room as to its lower floor.

Jealously Judith watched the windows of the second floor and the alone of the four detected it: free that showed for one brief instant well back in the shadows beyond one of the bedroom windows—a face that glimmered momentarily with the pallor of a ghost against the background of that obscurity, and then was gone.

Her eyes alone, indeed, could have recognized the features of Alan Law in that fugitive glimpse.

Two sentences exchanged between Hopi Jim and a beset-eyed fellow whom he roused from sudden slumbers behind the bar sealed their confidence with conviction the three fugitives were the fact-guests of the house occupying two of the three rooms that composed its upper story.

In the rush that followed up the narrow stairway, Judith led with such spirit that not even Marrophat suspected her revolver was poised solely with intent to shoot from his hand his own revolver the instant he leveled it at a human target.

Closed and locked doors confronted them, and their summons echoed to response, while the first door when broken in by a whole-souled kick disclosed nothing more satisfactory than an empty room its bed being the imprint of a woman's bed.

From the open window looking out the side of the house, they saw that the woman had been in the habit of jumping out of the window.

So it was that the three must have had war with the man who after all and pushing the door open, herded together in a room which looked out over the desert night, a room waiting in case of a rescue for the assault of a man who was and in fact was a man.

But it met with more stubborn resistance than had been anticipated. The door had been barricaded with within—re-enforced by furniture placed against it.

the united efforts of four men (including the heavy loader of the barroom) were required to overcome its inert resistance. But even when it was down, the room was found to be as empty as the first.

Only the fingers of two hands gripping the edge of the veranda roof showed the way the fugitives had flown, and these vanished instantly as the room was invaded.

Followed a swift rush of boots down the dusty street, and a chorus of blasphemy in the hotel hallway for Judith had headed the concerted rush for the staircase and contrived to block it for a full half minute by pretending to stumble and twist her ankle.

In spite of that alleged injury, she never limped, and wasn't a yard behind the first who broke from the hotel to the open, nor yet appreciably behind him in vaulting to saddle.

Well up the road a cloud of smoky dust half obscured the shapes of three who rode for their very lives.

Two pursuit was off in a twinkling and well bunched—Marrophat's mount leading by a nose, Judith second, Hopi Jim and Texas but little in the rear. And in the first rush they seemed to gain, moment by moment they drew up on the flying cloud of dust.

Judith heard an oath muttered beside her and saw Marrophat jerking a revolver from its holster. The weapon swept up and to a level; but as the hammer fell, Judith's horse caromed heavily against the other, swinging it half a dozen feet aside, and deflecting the bullet hopelessly.

The shock of collision was so great that Marrophat kept his seat with difficulty. He turned toward Judith a face livid with rage.

Simultaneously, as if taking the shot as the signal for a fusillade, Judith saw Alan Law back over his horse's rump and open fire.

An instant later his companion, Barcus, imitated his example.

In immediate consequence, Texas dropped reins, slumped forward over the pommel, wobbled weakly in his saddle for a moment, then losing the stirrups pitched headlong to the ground, while Hopi Jim's horse stopped short, precipitating his rider overhead, and dropped dead.

CHAPTER XXXVIII.

The Upper Trail.

In the ten minutes' delay necessitated by this reverse, a number of more or less innocent bystanders picked up the man Texas and carried him off to breathe his last beneath a roof. Hopi Jim picked himself up, brushed his person tolerably clear of clouds of dust and profanity, and departed in search of a mount to replace the horse that had been shot under him and Judith sat her horse calmly smiling sweet insolence into the exasperated countenance of Marrophat.

Incidentally, the fugitives disappeared round a bend in the road that led directly into the wild and barren heart of the Painted Hills.

In the brief interval that elapsed before his return with Hopi Jim, Marrophat contrived to persuade the bandit that Judith had been, at least indirectly, responsible for the catastrophe, with the upshot that, temporarily blinded to her fascinations by the glitter of nineteen thousand dollars in the near distance, Mr. Slade maintained his distance and a deaf ear to her blandishments. The only information as to their purpose that she was able to extract from either man, when the pursuing party turned aside from the main trail, some distance from Mesa, was that Hopi Jim knew a short cut through the range, via what he termed the upper trail by which they hoped to be able to head the fugitives off before they could gain the desert on the far side of the hills.

Only at long intervals did they draw rein to permit Hopi Jim to make reconnaissance of the lower trail that threaded the valley on the far side of the ridge.

Toward noon he returned in haste from the last of these surveys—scrambling recklessly down the mountainside and throwing himself upon his horse with the advice:

"We've headed 'em—can make it now if we ride like all get-out!"

For half an hour more they pushed on at the best speed to be obtained from their weary animals at length drawing rein at a point where the trail crossed the ridge and widened out upon a long, broad ledge that overhung the valley of the lower trail, with a clear drop to the latter from the brink of a good two hundred feet.

One hasty look back and down into the valley evoked a grunt of satisfaction from Hopi Jim.

"Just in time," he asseverated. Here they come! Ten minutes more.

His smile answered Marrophat's with unspeakable cruel significance.

"Texas will sleep better tonight when he knows how I've squandered the deal for him!" the bandit declared.

What are you going to do? Judith demanded, reining her horse in beside Marrophat as the latter dismounted.

A gesture drew her attention to a huge boulder poised insecurely on the very tip of the chasm.

Were we going to tip that over on your friends, Miss Judith? Marrophat replied, with a smugness of which his voice was simple—dead—efficient—eh? What more can you ask?

She answered only with an irrepressible gesture of scorn. Marrophat's laugh followed her as she turned away.

For some moments she strained her vision vainly endeavoring to penetrate the turbulent currents of superheated air that filled the valley. Then she made out indistinctly the faintly marked line of the lower trail, and immediately she caught a glimpse of three small figures, mounted, toiling painfully toward the point where death awaited them like a bolt from the blue.

Hastily she glanced over her shoulder. Hopi Jim and Marrophat, ignoring her were straining themselves against the boulder without budging an inch for all its apparent meagerness of pose. For an instant a wild hope flashed through her mind, but it was immediately extinguished when Hopi Jim stepped back and uttered a few words of which only two—'dynamite' and 'fuse'—reached her ears.

Kneeling beside the boulder he dug busily for an instant then lodged the stick to his satisfaction, attached the fuse, and breaking off edged on his belly to the edge of the cliff and looked down carefully calculating the length of the fuse by the distance of the party down below from the spot where the rock must fall.

But while he was so engaged and Marrophat aided him, all eager interest, Judith was taking advantage of their disregard of her.

Hurriedly unbuttoning her jacket she whipped a playing card from her pocket a Trey of hearts, and with the stub of a pencil scribbled three words on its face—'Danger! Go back!'

Then finding a small, flatish bit of rock, she bound the card to it with a bit of string, and with one more backward glance to make sure she was not watched, approached the brink.

Hopi Jim was meticulously shortening the fuse, Marrophat kneeling by his side.

In the canyon below the three were within two minutes of the danger point.

It was no trick at all to drop the stone so that it fell within a dozen feet of the leading horseman.

She saw him rein in suddenly, dismount, cast a look aloft, then dismount and pick up the warning.

As the others joined him, he detached the card and showed it to them. At the same time Hopi Jim and Marrophat jumped up and ran back, each seizing and holding his horse by nose and bridle.

Constrained to do likewise lest she lose her mount? Judith waited with a lightened heart.

The explosion smote dull echoes from the flanks of the Painted Hills all drowning in the noon day hush. The boulder teetered reluctantly on the brink, then disappeared with a tearing sound followed by a rush of earth and gravel, a wide gap appeared in the brink of the trail.

Leaving Marrophat to hold the two frightened horses, while the girl soothed her own, the bandit rushed to the edge, threw himself flat and swore bitterly with an accent of grievance, as he rose.

From the canyon below a dull noise of galloping hoofs advertised too plainly the failure of their attempt.

And Hopi Jim turned back only to find Judith mounted, reining her horse in between him and Marrophat and prepared to give emphasis to what she had to say with an automatic pistol that nestled snugly in her palm.

"One moment, Mr. Slade," she suggested evenly. Just a moment before you break the sad news to Mr. Marrophat. I've something to say that needs your attention—likewise, your respect it is this. I am parting company with you and Mr. Marrophat. I am riding on toward the west, by this trail. If either of you care to follow me—the automatic flashed ominously in the sun glare—"It will be with full knowledge of the consequences. Mr. Marrophat will enlighten you if you have any doubt of my ability to take care of myself in such affairs as this. If you are well advised, you will turn back and report failure to my father."

RAILROAD

MANY DEAD ENGINES IN PENNSY CEMETERY

When Henry's engine and other employees culminated in the cemetery with the big corporation, the men are formally retired and sent home to enjoy pension and the remainder of their lives. While Henry's locomotive was not the only one of the kind which had been retired, it was the only one which had been retired to the cemetery. Henry's engine was retired to the cemetery on Monday, October 26, 1914, and was the only one of the kind which had been retired to the cemetery.

JURY IN CARMAN CASE DISAGREE

man, who deliberately murdered under the spur of jealousy. In analyzing the testimony, he laid emphasis upon the testimony of the neccess, Celia Coleman, and Farrell, and explained why he had Celia removed from the Carman household soon after the murder.

He said he knew the murder was "an inside job" and that Celia, the servant, if anyone, would be the person to tell about it. Had he allowed the girl to stay in the house, he said she would have remained under the influence of the Carman family, and the truth never would have been known. He excused her alleged falsehoods at the start by her own words—that she was sorry for Mrs. Carman.

Before the justice began his charge Mr. Graham took exception to several of the district attorney's statements, claiming that the prosecutor had not stuck to the facts in the case.

Justice Kelly began his charge shortly after 9 o'clock. He explained the different degrees of homicide, discussed at some length the credibility of witnesses and said that a mass of the evidence had been admitted for the purpose of impeaching other witnesses. He also told the jury to remember that anything that had occurred not in the presence or hearing of the defendant was not binding upon her, and was to be disregarded in determining her guilt. The justice refrained from discussing any evidence.

KING BAGGOTT IN "SHADOWS" AT OPERA HOUSE TONIGHT

"Shadows" is a two reel play that is heralded as one of the most distinct innovations in film dramas. One that will disclose King Baggott as an artist unapproached in versatility, playing all the eleven character parts of the play himself.

"Mary Green's Husband." Mary Green, waitress, was rich without knowing it. A drummer made the discovery and also learned that the capitalists were planning to rob her. He married the waitress to rescue the fortune.

"Sally Joins the Force." A comedy featuring Ford Sterling, the "Lulu Love" director. The story is self is good, but it is the wonderful acting of the artist in the part that makes this film what it is.

"CONDUCTOR'S COURTSHIP" AT THE GLOBE TONIGHT

"The Conductor's Courtship" is a thrilling story of an elopement. Bill and Tom are rivals for the hand of Gail Allen, daughter of the station agent. The father orders her to marry Bill, but she elopes with Tom, and her father and Bill follow the train in which they are speeding away in an empty engine, but do not arrive until after the ceremony is performed.

"Long May It Wave" is a musical comedy in which the American flag figures in an unusual way.

"The Persistent Mr. Prince." Mr. Prince sees the picture of Miss Prunella Peach, a beautiful society girl, and determines to win her. He sends her his photograph and a message saying that he will marry her on May 1. She is so angry by his high handed manner, with the help of an airplane he succeeds.

GERMANS SMASH THROUGH RIVER YSER

CONCENTRATING FORCES AGAINST THE ALLIES

Making Fierce Attacks Between Dixmunde and Nieuport

HEAVY ARTILLERY DUEL ON RIGHT WING

Day and Night Fighting Raging in the Vicinity of Lille and Arras—Belgian Trenches Under Artillery Fire Since Saturday Morning—French and British Troops Capture 5000 Prisoners in the Northern District—German Forces on the Meuse Endangered by the Capture of Their Line of Communication Between Metz and St. Mihiel.

Kaiser Wilhelm's troops have forced the passage of the river Yser between Nieuport and Dixmunde, Belgium.

A violent battle is being fought between Nieuport and the river Yser. German attacks west and south of Lille have been repulsed.

France announced that French artillery has gained command over one of the main lines of German communication, leading from Metz to the German troops near St. Mihiel. This success endangers the forces endeavoring to drive a wedge across the Meuse river between Verdun and Toul.

French field artillery, according to the official report, has destroyed three new German batteries, one of large calibre on the Meuse.

(By International News Service)

Paris, Oct. 26.—Following up the advantage gained by breaking through the Belgian line along the Yser river and forcing the passage of that stream between Dixmunde and Nieuport, the Germans are concentrating their forces in a series of serious attacks at that point.

The Belgian trenches are under an incessant fire, which has lasted since Saturday morning.

Allies Capture 5000 Prisoners
Day and night fighting has been raging in the vicinity of Lille and Arras.

Farther north the French and British allies captured approximately 5000 prisoners in the last six days.

A heavy artillery duel has begun along the right wing of the allies.

Allies Maintain Front
It was officially stated today: "During the day yesterday our front has been maintained. Germans that had succeeded in crossing the river Yser, between Nieuport and Dixmunde have not been able to make any further progress."

In the battles of later days the only changes to have suffered considerable losses."

Taken by the Bayonet

In Russia, West of the Vistula river and north of Pilsen, Germans were thrown back upon Lwow, Sieradow and Kawa, which had been taken with the bayonet by Russians. South of the Pilsen, in the direction of Radom, a vigorous conflict is in progress, the Austro-Germans losing prisoners and guns. South of Sieradow, the Russians have crossed the Vistula in a great onrush, flinging the Austrians back upon the river San.

An Austrian column, debouching from the Carpathians upon Dobna, has been forced into the underbrush of the mountains.

ALLEGED CATTLE THIEF GOES TO PENITENTIARY

Several judicial matters were taken up in court this morning. Fred Carson, the defendant in the commonwealth vs. Carson case, was fined $1 and the cost of prosecution and sentenced to a minimum term of one year and a maximum term of two years in the Western Penitentiary. Carson was one of the alleged cattle thieves and was out on parole. He broke the parole and was brought here to the jail from DuBois on Friday evening.

Testimony was heard in a desultory case, and Harry Shaffer, the defendant, promised to live with his wife again if she would come back to their home. The matter was left open to see if they could not settle it between themselves.

In the case commonwealth vs. Howard Isenberg and Andrew Matts, petty robbery and larceny, the boys were given into the custody of their parents, the costs to be paid by the county.

Habeas corpus proceedings were brought for the release of Claud M. Watson from jail and $500 bail was given for his appearance at December court.

AUTOMOBILE PARTY MEETS WITH MISHAPS ON SUNDAY

Coe Walters, Ernest Baker, Earl Whitehill, Dan Pancoast, Leslie Wise and Lex McCloskey started in Walters' automobile to spend yesterday afternoon riding over the country. Numerous accidents happened and the car broke down between Philipsburg and Bigler. The boys were unable to return until this morning when they hired a man to back them in, and Coe Walters returned to the car with new tires and other repairs.

296,869 Prisoners of War

(By International News Service)
Berlin, Oct. 26.—Up to October 21 the Germans captured 296,869 prisoners of war, including 5641 officers, 27 of whom are generals.

The announcement thus classifies the prisoners:

French—Officers, 1472; privates, 160,897.

Russian—Officers, 2164; privates, 104,524.

Belgian—Officers, 547; privates, 21,378.

English—Officers, 3,218; privates, 8,569.

Of the 27 generals in German fortresses 18 are Russian, 6 French and three Belgians.

JURY IN CARMAN CASE DISAGREES

Woman Charged With Murder Must Stand Another Trial

SMITH SCORES MRS. CARMAN

Declares That She Was a "Designing Woman" Who Killed Mrs. Bailey in a Fit of Jealousy—Court Delivers an Impartial Charge—Jury Was Out Fourteen Hours.

Meadow, Oct. 26.—The Carman jury on Sunday disagreed and have been discharged. The jury was out fourteen hours.

Mrs. Carman collapsed upon hearing the verdict and was carried from the courtroom.

Her attorney announced that bail would be furnished for her release, should the court consent, pending a new trial.

The jury stood for two hours and a half before reaching a verdict.

For many hours before a verdict was reached, the jury was in a deadlock. The judge, in his charge, told the jury that they must reach a verdict.

The Progress is reliably informed that Hon. Thomas H. Murry will not vote for Boies Penrose for the United States senate. Our informant states that Mr. Murry will vote for Gifford Pinchot.

Hon. Thomas H. Murry is well known in every county in this state as a conscientious, intelligent and vigorous thinker, a student of men and an advocate of honest government and honorable living. His reasons for refusing to vote for Penrose may well be imagined by his friends.

Mr. Murry knows the evils of the liquor traffic. He knows that Penrose is the candidate of the ruin element and that as such he refused to permit a local option plank to be inserted in the Republican state platform. He knows that the liquor element is putting forth every effort to elect Penrose in order that it may control the next legislature and defeat any attempt on the part of the temperance people to have a proposed amendment to the state constitution providing for submission to the people of the question of having local option adopted in Pennsylvania.

The acquisition of Mr. Murry to the Pinchot cause ought to be worth a good many votes for the Washington candidate in Clearfield county and Pennsylvania. The people of this county and state have a high regard for the political opinions of Mr. Murry. They know that he is sincere in expressing the opinion that Pinchot is a much more desirable candidate for United States senator than Penrose is. They know that Mr. Murry is a man whose example and influence will be a help to the people.

CLYMER ELEVEN BADLY BEATEN BY HIGH SCHOOL

Although the football team from Clymer, which played the Clearfield High school at the Driving park on Saturday, was composed of much older and heavier men, yet the scholastic eleven experienced very little difficulty in piling up a score of 37 to 0 before the referee's whistle finally brought the contest to a close.

With the advantage in weight against them the high school boys opened the game with open plays and forward passes in which speed and dexterity counted most, and with this system of attack scored two touchdowns on the visitors before the first period was over.

Clymer was in possession of the ball but once in the opening period and then failed to make first down, their attempts to break through the Clearfield line being repulsed with heavy losses by the excellent work of the red and black guards and tackles.

In the second half Clearfield resorted to a defensive game and the linemen showed that they have greatly improved in form since the game with Bellefonte, when weakness in this department was apparent. Coach Kane, H. Flegal, Lima, Fulford and W. Flegal played excellent games for the high school while the entire team, from end to end, did better in the opinion of the coaches and close followers of the eleven, than ever before this season. Judging from the game of Saturday the prospects are indeed bright for victories over DuBois and the other opponents of the season.

How Badger Sank the Submarine

(By International News Service)
Sherness, England, Oct. 26.—The English destroyer "Badger," which rammed and sank a German submarine off Holland Saturday has arrived here for repairs. The officers made this statement: "It was nearly dusk when the look-out discovered a strange craft ahead. We raced and crashed through her shell, sinking her. Our bows were damaged, but not seriously."

Russians Drive Back Germans and Austrians

(By International News Service)
Petrograd, Oct. 26.—It was officially stated today: "The German and Austrian invasion of Poland has been definitely checked and the Russian army is driving the invaders back into Galicia."

The Russians holding all along the line and are repelling their vigorous offensive."

The community at Kylertown was greatly shocked Saturday night when it was learned that Osler Hughes, a well known farmer of near the town had committed suicide.

Mr. Hughes lived on a farm about one-half mile from Kylertown. He was a thrifty farmer with no apparent troubles to worry him, therefore the announcement that he had killed himself was startling news to the people of the community.

According to the information gleaned relative to the suicide, Mr. Hughes shot himself in the head about 6 o'clock Saturday evening, the bullet entering the right side of his head above the temple and passing through his head emerged near the left temple. He remained in an unconscious condition until 4 o'clock Sunday morning, when he died.

From what can be learned Hughes was jealous of a hired man, Ralph Lewis, who had been working on the Hughes farm since last summer. He and Lewis had some words Saturday morning while in the barn. Hughes is also said to have upbraided his wife.

When Lewis entered the house Hughes told him to pack his clothes and leave the farm, which the young man did.

Shortly after 5 o'clock in the evening Hughes went into the house and began taking off his shoes. His wife told him the pigs had not been fed, and he replied, "I am going to kill myself." He started to get a gun hanging in the kitchen and his wife ran screaming to a neighboring farm for help. A brother-in-law returned to the house, but saw nothing of Hughes until an upstairs room was entered. Hughes was found on a bed with a revolver in his hand, himself in a dying condition from the wound in his head.

District Attorney Welch and Coroner Pollum held an investigation, but it was found to be a clear case of suicide.

Mr. Hughes was about 50 years of age and was highly respected by his neighbors. He was of a jovial disposition, always looking upon the bright side of life, hence his rash act is the more unaccountable, there being no known cause for his seeking to end his life.

Deceased is survived by his widow, one brother, William, and two sisters, Mrs. James Wertz and Mrs. James F. Thompson, all residing on adjoining farms near Kylertown. He was the son of James Hughes, one of the early settlers of Cooper township. At the time of his death he was supervisor of the township.

The funeral will be held tomorrow at 2 P. M., services being held at the Messiah church, Kylertown, and interment in the cemetery of that church.

Probably not all of the "cheers for Penrose" issue from the cup that cheers and inebriates.

Despite the fighting in Belgium, Brand Whitlock continues to get some of his bright sayings through the office of the censor.

Londoners are "looking up" these days and nights, but not in accordance with the religious admonition. They are on the watch for that visit from Zeppelins.

It is claimed that a large number of Democrats will vote for Penrose. Sure; there are many Penrose Democrats in the state, and they will vote for Penrose or Palmer.

However, the United States should be careful not to get into a dispute with any foreign power through this country's defense of the Standard Oil company's attempt to ship oil to Germany.

Shall the great state of Pennsylvania be represented in the United States senate by the candidate of the Standard Oil company the liquor interests or by the candidate of the people?

While admitting that Dr. Brumbaugh's private life is unimpeachable, it cannot be denied that he is indorsed in his gubernatorial election by men who are not leaders in highly moral movements.

Vote for Pinchot and protection to the children who are forced to labor in mills and factories at a mere pittance because Penrose defeated the child labor bill in the Pennsylvania legislature.

Congress has adjourned, and the members hope that the people are so busy discussing the war they will not demand of the congressman an explanation of the long session at which no beneficial legislation was passed.

Vote for Lex N. Mitchell for congress at large and help defeat John R. K. Scott, the subservient tool of the Penrose gangsters who defeated the bills in the legislature which were intended to advance the interests of the people.

The kaiser pretends to despise the serfs of Russia. What are the people of an empire who have no say in the making of war in which the subjects of the empire must do the fighting and be killed at the pleasure of their ruler?

There is nothing in the past record of Hon. Alonso S. Moulthrop with which constituents can find fault, but there is much which they can commend. As state senator Mr. Moulthrop will continue to serve the people and fight the Penrose gangsters.

When you read that two hundred thousand men were killed, wounded or taken prisoners in one battle in Europe you can get some idea of what stupendous casualties result in modern fighting by realizing that these figures stand for the population of a large American city.

CANNOT SUPPORT PENROSE

Hon. Thomas H. Murray's indorsement of Gifford Pinchot ought to be worth a good many votes for Pinchot in this state. Everybody knows that Mr. Murray is a loyal Republican, and when he declares that he cannot support Penrose there is a good reason for the declaration. Mr. Murray and a large number of other Republicans know that Penrose, besides being unfit to represent this state in the United States senate, has done more to disrupt the Republican party than any other man in the state.

Mr. Murray is a foe to liquor, and he knows that the liquor element is seeking to have Penrose elected. The Clearfield lawyer and author is a close student of men, and his reading of the character of Penrose does not place the senator in a favorable light in Mr. Murray's eyes. Mr. Murray believes that Gifford Pinchot is a clean, conscientious man, a man who has no alliance with grafters or rum, hence Mr. Murray will vote for Mr. Pinchot. Those Republicans who will follow Mr. Murray's example will have no cause for regretting their action.

BERLIN AND PETROGRAD

Readers of newspapers must be somewhat bothered to discover what is truth and what is fiction in the news sent out from Berlin and Petrograd regarding the war in Galicia. The German and Russian war officers should get together and endeavor to make their announcements more truthful and less conflicting. Berlin reports that the Russians have been driven out of Galicia and have fled to Russian territory. The statements from Petrograd are the exact reverse of the Berlin stories, the Germans being the ones to be whipped out of their boots.

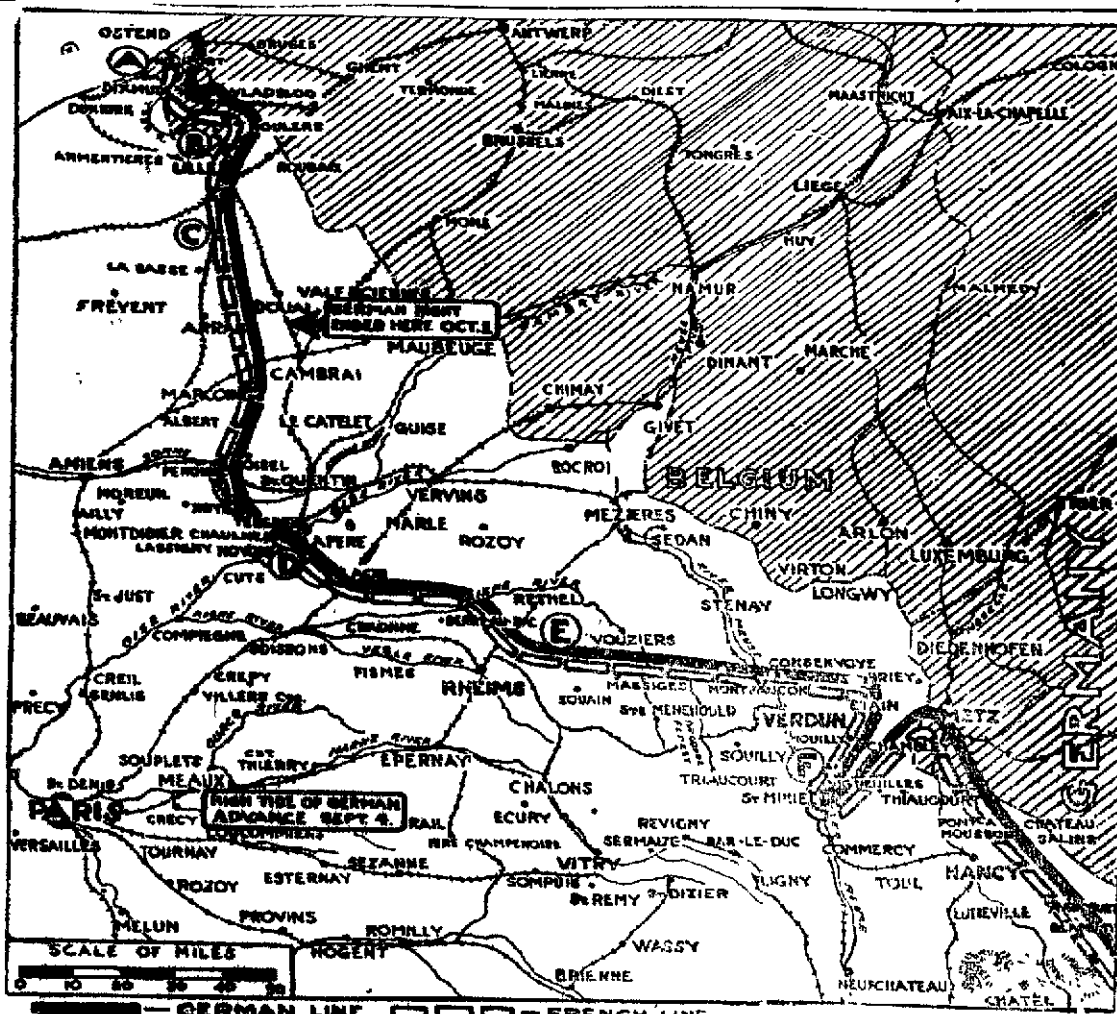

What is the American citizen to make of these conflicting reports other than that both Berlin and Petrograd are not adhering strictly to the truth in making their announcements? It is but natural that Berlin and Petrograd should issue rosy statements for home consumption, for it is necessary in both countries to cause the people to imagine that victory perches upon the banners of the home government. But what is the use of trying to fool the people of the rest of the world with fake war news? That hard fighting has been in progress around Przemyśl and Warsaw there is no doubting but neither side appears to have gained any advantage up to this time.

IT'S UP TO KALBFUS

More than one-quarter of a million dollars will flow into the state treasury from fees collected from hunters in this state this year. Clearfield county hunters will contribute about six thousand dollars of this amount. It was supposed that the money gathered from hunters would be used by the state game commission to restock the woods and fields with game birds and animals. This has not been done in past years and it will not be done next year. No game of any kind, with the exception of a few elk, has been placed in Clearfield county for a number of years.

In the meantime, the hunters from the big cities—pot hunters, almost everyone of them, have been engaged in slaughtering game birds in several of the counties, into which they have been invited to hunt through the efforts of Secretary Kalbfus. A Williamsport newspaper states that one party of game hogs from Northumberland county returned home with four hundred pheasants and thirty squirrels. Is it any wonder that local hunters fail to find it impossible to shoot game of any kind? Is it any wonder that the legitimate hunter denounces the state game commission for allowing a few favored game hogs from the big cities to slay all the game in sight just to make a big showing when they return home?

Isn't it about time that there should be a shaking up of the state game commission? Every sportsman in the state should enter protest against present conditions relative to game. There is no game in the woods and fields because the state game commission does not spend the money at its disposal to restock woods and fields and because pets of the secretary of the commission and his wardens are permitted to kill everything in sight without protest or any effort to stop the useless and wicked slaughter. With a large amount of money at its disposal the state game commission should be able to replace the

The Planting of a Tree.

Wouldst thou upbuild a home where sweet wild lives are nested,
Glad with the sound of song, quick with the flash of wings,
Where the soft broods may rock, warmhoused and unmolested,
Deep in the leafy nooks, through all the changeable springs?

O, wouldst thou rear an arch of no-blessed grace and splendor,
Lifted in air and light, shaped by the sun and storm,
Moved by the wandering wind, swayed by each influence tender,
Yet by the hand of life molded to steadfast form?

Wouldst thou make day more fair, and night more rich and holy,
Winter more keenly bright, and summer's self more dear,
Grant the sweet earth a gift, deep rooted, ripening slowly,
Add to the sum of joys that bless the rounded year?

Go, then, and plant a tree, lovely in sun and shadow,
Gracious in every kind—maple and oak and pine.
Peace of the forest glade, wealth of the fruitful meadow,
Blessings of dew and shade, hereafter shall be thine!

For though thou never see the joy thy hand hath granted,
Those who shall follow three thy generous boon may share.
Thou shalt be Nature's child, who her best fruit hath planted,
And each of many a spring shall find thy gift more fair.

CHAPTER XXXVII.

Fireplay.

Contented with the promise of a thousand dollar advance on his contract, providing he returned with horses within a stipulated time, Mr. Hopi Jim Slade drifted quietly away into the desert night.

Well content, persuaded that the morrow's sun would never set upon a world tenanted by one Alan Law, that monomaniac, Seneca Trine, forgot his recent ill temper and set himself diplomatically to adjust the differences between his daughter, Judith, and his first lieutenant, Marrophat.

It was no facile task Marrophat could not be trusted to work with a single mind because of his infatuation for Judith. Judith could no more be trusted faithfully to serve out her vow to bring Alan Law to her father's feet alive or dead, because—O cruel irony of Fate!—she herself had fallen in love with that same man whose death she had pledged herself to compass. Only when, as now, half mad with jealousy, determined to see Alan dead rather than yield him to the woman he loved, her sister, might Judith be counted upon to serve her father in his lust for vengeance as he would be served—and even so not without Marrophat at her elbow to egg her on through her resentment of his surveillance. Neither could he be trusted, in deed, to work alone to the desired consummation, for Trine had secret reason to fear Marrophat might, given opportunity, connive at Alan's escape in order that he might marry Rose and so throw Judith back into his arms, Marrophat's arms.

Poor, deluded fool! Such was the private comment of Marrophat's master.

For all that, it was the man and not his daughter, whom Trine designated to lead the expedition, cunningly counting on Judith's chagrin to work upon her passions and excite her to one last, mad, blind attempt that should prove successful.

Smiling his secret smile, Trine announced his decision at the last moment, while Hopi Jim waited with his horses and an assistant—one Texas—for whose utter innocence of scruples Mr. Slade unhesitatingly vouched.

Suddenly submissive, at least in outward seeming, Judith bowed to this decision, marched out of the car, and suffered Marrophat to help her mount her horse.

Now, deliberately, as the little cavalcade rode through the moonlit desert night, the girl maneuvered her horse to the side of Hopi Jim, and then dropped back, permitting Marrophat to lead the way with Texas.

As deliberately she set herself to work upon the bandit's susceptibility to her charms.

Within an hour she had him ready to do anything to win her smile.

In that first rush of golden day a khaki and the girl came quietly into the town of Mesa riding slowly in order that the noise of their approach might not warn the fugitives, who Hopi asserted confidently would still be sound asleep in the accommodations offered by the town's one hotel.

It was to be termed a town only in courtesy, this Mesa, a straggling street of shacks ramshackle relics of what had once been a promising community the half-way station between the railroad and the mining camps, secreted in the fastnesses of the Painted Hills—camps now abandoned, their very names almost faded out of the memory of mankind.

Midway in this string of edifices the hotel stood—a rough, unpainted, wooden edifice, mainly veranda and bar-room as to its lower floor.

Jealously Judith watched the windows of the second floor and the alone of the four detected it free that showed for one brief instant well back in the shadows beyond one of the bedroom windows—a face that glimmered momentarily with the pallor of a ghost against the background of that obscurity, and then was gone.

Her eyes alone, indeed, could have recognized the features of Alan Law in that fugitive glimpse.

Two sentences exchanged between Hopi Jim and a beset-eyed fellow whom he roused from sudden slumbers behind the bar sealed their confidence with conviction the three fugitives were the fact-guests of the house occupying two of the three rooms that composed its upper story.

In the rush that followed up the narrow stairway, Judith led with such spirit that not even Marrophat suspected her revolver was poised solely with intent to shoot from his hand his own revolver the instant he leveled it at a human target.

Closed and locked doors confronted them, and their summons echoed to response, while the first door when broken in by a whole-souled kick disclosed nothing more satisfactory than an empty room its bed being the imprint of a woman's bed.

the united efforts of four men (including the heavy loader of the barroom) were required to overcome its inert resistance. But even when it was down, the room was found to be as empty as the first.

Only the fingers of two hands gripping the edge of the veranda roof showed the way the fugitives had flown, and these vanished instantly as the room was invaded.

Followed a swift rush of boots down the dusty street, and a chorus of blasphemy in the hotel hallway for Judith had headed the concerted rush for the staircase and contrived to block it for a full half minute by pretending to stumble and twist her ankle.

In spite of that alleged injury, she never limped, and wasn't a yard behind the first who broke from the hotel to the open, nor yet appreciably behind him in vaulting to saddle.

Well up the road a cloud of smoky dust half obscured the shapes of three who rode for their very lives.

Two pursuit was off in a twinkling and well bunched—Marrophat's mount leading by a nose, Judith second, Hopi Jim and Texas but little in the rear. And in the first rush they seemed to gain, moment by moment they drew up on the flying cloud of dust.

Judith heard an oath muttered beside her and saw Marrophat jerking a revolver from its holster. The weapon swept up and to a level; but as the hammer fell, Judith's horse caromed heavily against the other, swinging it half a dozen feet aside, and deflecting the bullet hopelessly.

The shock of collision was so great that Marrophat kept his seat with difficulty. He turned toward Judith a face livid with rage.

Simultaneously, as if taking the shot as the signal for a fusillade, Judith saw Alan Law back over his horse's rump and open fire.

An instant later his companion, Barcus, imitated his example.

In immediate consequence, Texas dropped reins, slumped forward over the pommel, wobbled weakly in his saddle for a moment, then losing the stirrups pitched headlong to the ground, while Hopi Jim's horse stopped short, precipitating his rider overhead, and dropped dead.

CHAPTER XXXVIII.

The Upper Trail.

In the ten minutes' delay necessitated by this reverse, a number of more or less innocent bystanders picked up the man Texas and carried him off to breathe his last beneath a roof. Hopi Jim picked himself up, brushed his person tolerably clear of clouds of dust and profanity, and departed in search of a mount to replace the horse that had been shot under him and Judith sat her horse calmly smiling sweet insolence into the exasperated countenance of Marrophat.

Incidentally, the fugitives disappeared round a bend in the road that led directly into the wild and barren heart of the Painted Hills.

In the brief interval that elapsed before his return with Hopi Jim, Marrophat contrived to persuade the bandit that Judith had been, at least indirectly, responsible for the catastrophe, with the upshot that, temporarily blinded to her fascinations by the glitter of nineteen thousand dollars in the near distance, Mr. Slade maintained his distance and a deaf ear to her blandishments. The only information as to their purpose that she was able to extract from either man, when the pursuing party turned aside from the main trail, some distance from Mesa, was that Hopi Jim knew a short cut through the range, via what he termed the upper trail by which they hoped to be able to head the fugitives off before they could gain the desert on the far side of the hills.

Only at long intervals did they draw rein to permit Hopi Jim to make reconnaissance of the lower trail that threaded the valley on the far side of the ridge.

Toward noon he returned in haste from the last of these surveys—scrambling recklessly down the mountainside and throwing himself upon his horse with the advice:

"We've headed 'em—can make it now if we ride like all get-out!"

For half an hour more they pushed on at the best speed to be obtained from their weary animals at length drawing rein at a point where the trail

crossed the ridge and widened out upon a long, broad ledge that overhung the valley of the lower trail, with a clear drop to the latter from the brink of a good two hundred feet.

One hasty look back and down into the valley evoked a grunt of satisfaction from Hopi Jim.

"Just in time," he assented. Here they come! Ten minutes more His smile answered Marrophat's with unspeakable cruel significance.

"Texas will sleep better tonight when he knows how I've squared the deal for him!" the bandit declared.

What are you going to do? Judith demanded, reining her horse in beside Marrophat as the latter dismounted.

A gesture drew her attention to a huge boulder poised insecurely on the very tip of the chasm.

Were we going to tip that over on your friends, Miss Judith? Marrophat replied, with a smugness of which his voice Simple—dead—efficient—eh? What more can you ask?

She answered only with an irrepressible gesture of scorn. Marrophat's laugh followed her as she turned away.

For some moments she strained her vision vainly endeavoring to penetrate the turbulent currents of superheated air that filled the valley. Then she made out indistinctly the faintly marked line of the lower trail, and immediately she caught a glimpse of three small figures, mounted, toiling painfully toward the point where death awaited them like a bolt from the blue.

Hastily she glanced over her shoulder. Hopi Jim and Marrophat, ignoring her were straining themselves against the boulder without budging an inch for all its apparent meagerness of pose. For an instant a wild hope flashed through her mind, but it was immediately extinguished when Hopi Jim stepped back and uttered a few words of which only two—'dynamite' and 'fuse'—reached her ears.

Kneeling beside the boulder he dug busily for an instant then lodged the stick to his satisfaction, attached the fuse, and breaking off edged on his belly to the edge of the cliff and looked down carefully calculating the length of the fuse by the distance of the party down below from the spot where the rock must fall.

But while he was so engaged and Marrophat aided him, all eager interest, Judith was taking advantage of their disregard of her.

Hurriedly unbuttoning her jacket she whipped a playing card from her pocket a Trey of hearts, and with the stub of a pencil scribbled three words on its face—'Danger! Go back!'

Then finding a small, flatish bit of rock, she bound the card to it with a bit of string, and with one more backward glance to make sure she was not watched, approached the brink.

Hopi Jim was meticulously shortening the fuse, Marrophat kneeling by his side.

In the canyon below the three were within two minutes of the danger point.

It was no trick at all to drop the stone so that it fell within a dozen feet of the leading horseman.

She saw him rein in suddenly, dismount, cast a look aloft, then dismount and pick up the warning.

As the others joined him, he detached the card and showed it to them. At the same time Hopi Jim and Marrophat jumped up and ran back, each seizing and holding his horse by nose and bridle.

Constrained to do likewise lest she lose her mount? Judith waited with a lightened heart.

The explosion smote dull echoes from the flanks of the Painted Hills all drowning in the noon day hush. The boulder teetered reluctantly on the brink, then disappeared with a tearing sound followed by a rush of earth and gravel, a wide gap appeared in the brink of the trail.

Leaving Marrophat to hold the two frightened horses, while the girl soothed her own, the bandit rushed to the edge, threw himself flat and swore bitterly with an accent of grievance, as he rose.

From the canyon below a dull noise of galloping hoofs advertised too plainly the failure of their attempt.

And Hopi Jim turned back only to find Judith mounted, reining her horse in between him and Marrophat and prepared to give emphasis to what she had to say with an automatic pistol that nestled snugly in her palm.

"One moment, Mr. Slade," she suggested evenly. Just a moment before you break the sad news to Mr. Marrophat. I've something to say that needs your attention—likewise, your respect it is this. I am parting company with you and Mr. Marrophat. I am riding on toward the west, by this trail. If either of you care to follow me—the automatic flashed ominously in the sun glare—"It will be with full knowledge of the consequences. Mr. Marrophat will enlighten you if you have any doubt of my ability to take care of myself in such affairs as this. If you are well advised, you will turn back and report failure to my father.
